Build

I'll inspect the latest build logs first. If the shared settings didn't resolve the error, I'll investigate the install step rather than ask you to repeat the same retry.

The shared settings didn't resolve it either. The build still fails in the automatic dependency installer, before the custom build command runs.
I found a documented setting to skip that automatic install step. I'll use it and make the custom build command install the dependencies explicitly, with user-level installs disabled. This keeps the existing Flask app and dependency list unchanged.

The latest build still failed in the automatic dependency installer. Neither earlier environment-only fix resolved it.
I've now changed the publish configuration to:
Skip the failing automatic installer.
Install dependencies through an explicit build command with user-level installs disabled.
The exact command passed a local dry run under the conflicting settings that caused the error, and the app still loads in Preview.
Republish to verify this revised fix. A successful deployment is not yet confirmed.
